My further understanding is that the steel beam structural supports and their connecting rivets wouldn't need to melt to fail catastrophically, but simply be heated to a point to affect their tensile strength. No different than a gun action not properly heat treated.

I gave up years ago. When it comes up, I do my best to chime in. Kerosene cannot melt steel, Jet Fuel is essentially Kerosene. Just a simple fact. Those buildings would have caught an aluminum aircraft n simply ingested it. Yes, fires would've occurred, but no collapse.

This is why the Jewish worldview is inherently exclusive (they don't evangelize) and supremacist in nature. The theology itself relies on a circular relationship in

So God made the world, and it's inherently flawed. He's counting on the Jews to bear the burden of correcting it.

Don't you see that, logically, this has to mean that the Jewish race must necessarily possess a creative/curative capacity greater than that of God himself?

Killin' puppies...

> Tornow took Blondi's pups and shot them in the garden of the bunker complex on 30 April, after Hitler and Eva Braun committed suicide. He also killed Eva Braun's two dogs, Frau Gerda Christian's dogs, and his own dachshund. Tornow was later captured by the Allies.[28] Hitler's nurse, Erna Flegel, said in 2005 that Blondi's death had affected the people in the bunker more than Eva Braun's suicide.[29] After the battle in Berlin ended, the remains of Hitler, Braun, and two dogs (thought to be Blondi and her offspring Wulf) were discovered in a shell crater by a unit of SMERSH, the Soviet counter-intelligence

> During the course of 29 April 1945, Hitler learned of the death of his ally Benito Mussolini at the hands of Italian partisans. This, along with the fact the Soviet Red Army was closing in on his location, strengthened Hitler in his resolve not to allow himself or his wife to be captured. That afternoon, Hitler expressed doubts about the cyanide capsules he had received through Heinrich Himmler's SS.[24] By this point, Hitler regarded Himmler as a traitor, and he had doubts about the content of the capsules. To verify the capsules' contents, Hitler—who already intended to have Blondi killed so that she did
